

Spend next summer in the Rockies with ...

THE DENVER POST

Internship Program 2009

The No. 1 newspaper in the Rocky Mountain region, The Denver Post, is helping shape the futures of the next generation of journalists by offering a 10-week internship for the summer of 2009. To do so we are looking for talented young people who want to make a difference.

Interns work in several parts of the newsroom — as news or features reporters, online producers, photographers, graphic artists or designers. Denver Post interns are paid about $500 per week (housing and transportation to Denver are not included).

We work with Dow Jones Newspaper Fund to identify candidates for copy editing and a minority business reporting internship. Please apply directly to Dow Jones Newspaper Fund for these positions. We also work with APSE to select a sports reporter intern.

REQUIREMENTS

- Applicants should have completed junior year in college before Summer 2009
- A demonstrated interest in print and online journalism (clips or portfolio)
- Reporting applicants should include no more than 5 clips
- Please include cover letter outlining which position most interests you
- List of three references

If you are a motivated college student looking to thrive in a newsroom atmosphere, please send your letter, clips or portfolio, resume and references to:
